According to a fall 2007 AACC Faces of the Future student survey, a Lincoln Land Community College student is most likely

- a female high school graduate, under the age of 21, enrolled in four classes.
- She learned about the college through her family, friends and high school counselor.
- She decided to attend LLCC because of the low cost and proximity to home.
- English is her primary language and she lives with her parents.
- She works part-time (11-20 hours weekly), changed employment recently and earns less than $10,000 annually.
- Having a steady, secure job and time for personal/family interests is extremely important to her.
- With web and email access at home and work, she surfs the web daily.
- This LLCC student is a "first-generation" student who accesses financial aid and her savings account to support her education. She also depends on her parents for some financial support.
- Personal financial issues are the biggest difficulty she has encountered while taking classes and the cost of transportation and textbooks add to the problem.
- She is not sure what career path she will follow but shows interest in the health professions.
- Her ultimate goal is to transfer to a four-year college after completing her associate degree.
- She feels respected by instructors and administrators at the college and feels a sense of general safety and security while on campus and attending classes.
- The registration process proves to be student-friendly for her and she finds computing services and facilities available when she needs them.
- Her academic experiences at LLCC have been positive and she would recommend the college to her friends.
